Linguistics

This multilingual world is enriched with more than 7000 spoken and written languages. Linguistics, a science of language, deals with different structural levels of language by focusing on the core areas like phonetics, phonology, morphology and syntax. It covers several sub-branches like historical linguistics, grammatical tradition of the country, sociolinguistics, psycholinguistics, neurolinguistics, clinical linguistics, cognitive linguistics, mathematical linguistics, and field linguistics, evolution of human language, linguistic anthropology, behavioral linguistics, geolinguistics, bio-linguistics & so on. Pragmatics, discourse analysis, stylistics etc., language teaching & learning, computational linguistics, corpus linguistics, language modelling/ speech recognition etc. have immense potential in the fields of employment and research.

The successful students after completing their UG and PG courses in linguistics may have opportunities for various jobs within the country and abroad specially as University and College faculty, language teachers and researchers, in different government sectors dealing with the languages, in technological institutes dealing with the natural language and human cognition, in various projects related to languages and speech, like transcription, translation, speech and language annotations, ASR, NLP, NLG, OCR, artificial intelligence, robotics, as content developer, content writer, forensic linguist, manuscriptologist, archiving, digital humanities, proof reader, lexicographer, interpreter, psycholinguist, clinical linguist, speech therapist and other private sectors etc.

Linguistics as a flourishing young discipline provides opportunity for Ph D & Post Doctoral studies in any part of the globe.

Ancient Indian and World History

Ancient Indian and World History (AIWH) has been taught as an important subject at the Sanskrit College and University almost since its inception.

At present Ancient Indian and World History (AIWH) and its syllabus have been made contemporary and updated. The name of the subject is Ancient Indian and World History (AIWH) instead of just 'History' as it includes archaeology, anthropology, history of Indian art and architecture, epigraphy, museum study etc. Learning this subject with the above-mentioned courses will help students to get direct knowledge of primary sources of history as well as gain special knowledge about ancient India. Not only that, keeping in mind the needs of the present age, the course has been arranged to suit the requirements of NEET/SET and other competitive exams. The employment opportunities in this field are myriad: ranging from teaching jobs in schools, colleges and universities, in digital learning, governmental and private sector, in museums and research institutes, as well as in journalism, content development and technical writing.

PALI

Pali is a Middle Indo-Aryan language. It is the language through which Gautama, the Buddha preached His Dhamma (doctrine) during His lifetime i.e., circa 6th century BCE. These preachings are collected and collated in the Tipitaka (Three Baskets) which is popular in all the parts of the world (mostly South and Southeast Asia) where Theravada Buddhism prevails. This Indian language crossed the border of Indian subcontinent along with Buddhism more than two thousand years ago and is still used as a popular sacred language in Sri Lanka, Bangladesh, Myanmar, Thailand, Laos, Cambodia and other countries of Asia where Theravada Buddhism flourishes.

Apart from the Tipitaka (Canonical literature), the development of Non-Canonical literature (particularly the Vamsa texts) in these parts of the world provides us with an immense treasure of socio-political history of these regions including that of the Indian subcontinent.

The fields of work available to students after completing an Undergraduate course in Pali are:

- * Teaching*
- * Research*
- * Psychological Counseling*
- * Managing Stress*
- * Meditation Counseling*
- * Managing Buddhist Tourism*
- * Guiding Buddhist Tourists*
- * Pursuing career in the field of Ancient History of India, Archaeology, Museology, Comparative Religion, Translation Studies and Historical Linguistics.*
- * International Relations (particularly in South and Southeast Asia).*
- * Conflict Management and Peace Studies*
